Personal luxury and anticipatory service

ELEGANT AND EXCLUSIVE, THE SANCHANA MAKES A VERY FAVORABLE FIRST IMPRESSION. Arriving at the ferry terminal from Singapore, you'll sip Champagne in a private lounge while your passport is fast-tracked and your luggage handled. The gracious staff, combined with the refined architecture and grand interiors, create a unique atmosphere typical of a five boutique resort. But there is nothing typical here. Anticipatory service means the staff doesn't just know your name, they know what you enjoy for breakfast, what time you'd like to unwind, and if you prefer coffee, tea, or hot chocolate with your cookies at bedtime.

Luxury accommodations with parquet floors and to-die-for linens - there are just 20 private suites and villas within the appealing colonial-style mansion and landscaped grounds - are so thoughtfully distributed that the resort is fairly hidden. There is also a tranquil spa that offers volcanic stone massages in outdoor cabanas and a glorious 50-meter infinity pool in the courtyard that overlooks a beautiful silver sand beach with sun loungers.

There is so much to keep children occupied, too, from bocce to bicycles, park(ground), and beach games to staff-arranged treasure hunts. The family-first attitude extends to the resort's social responsibility initiatives, led by its mascot, Mr. Morris.

THE SANCHANA SOCIAL INITIATIVE

Meet Mr. Morris, the endearing pug-like to explore their artistic side and to better themselves and those around them. Caring for others and pushing the environment are essential values for Sanchana. He'll visit in a world of "perfectly imperfect" as possible, his black and white stripes, his winks, his little Sanchana look, whatever white, or even somewhere in between.

He is the "spokes" for his respective foundation that supports education and scholarship programs, a unique training initiative where orphaned children and women live together, interact, and help each other to achieve their education dreams and enter competitive markets, and he partners with Smile Train.
